Our world is in the midst of increasing violence, over stimulation, excessive information, and fast-paced lifestyles. Many children spend too much time and energy facing peer pressure and worry about things such as being bullied. When they do play, it is often with electronic gadgets that do not promote much introspection or creativity. Children are moving further away from self-expression, self play and exploration of the wonders of the world around them. There is a growing trend among children to protect themselves from harm. We need to guide our children in exploring their own sense of soulfulness and creativity.
